By tradition, a ruling party's president becomes premier. The polarization between Mr. Ohira and Mr. Fukuda could make the succession fight a long one, although party leaders hoped to forestall a drawn-out feud by choosing a successor within the next week. Many observers expect the fight to last until about Dec. 10, when the Diet is scheduled to meet in extraordinary session to approve a supplementary national

According to an associate, Mr. Tanaka decided more than a week ago to resign, but delayed his announcement until after last week's visit of President Ford. The visit was regarded as having assured Mr. Tanaka's place in history as the first premier to meet an incumbent American president on Japanese soil. As an act of "diplomatic courtesy" Mr. Tanaka delayed his announcement until Mr. Ford had returned to the United States, aides said.

The immediate cause of Mr. Tanaka's resignation was a magasine article last month that raised a series of questions about his personal financial dealings while in public office, Mr. Tanaka is a self-made man, having risen from status as a farmer's son to become wealthy construction magnate.

Vindication Plans

"I eventually plan to make clear the truth and seek the understanding of the people," he said in a statement. However, he has made no specific commitment on when and how he plans to do that.

The National Tax Office has been investigating Mr. Tanaka's finances and opposition parties have vowed to hold a parliamentary hearing at which his friends and associates will be publicly from disputed frontier areas as a precondition to normalizing relations between the two countries.

Mr. Brezhnev's remarks had the effect of nullifying China's offer earlier this month of a nonaggression pact, which Peking linked to the troop pullback. Despite some softening of rhetoric, the current exchange of Sino-Soviet positions, Western analysts here believe, has underscored differences rather than narrowed them. "Peking declares outright," Mr. More Talks Ulan Bator, the capital of Outer Mongolia, "that it will agree to talks on border questions only after its demand concerning the so-called 'disputed areas' is met. It is quite obvious, comrades, that such a position is absolutely un-acceptable and .re reject it." Unreservedly Optimistic

Mr. Brezhnev also spoke of last weekend's meeting with President Ford and was unreservedly optimistic about the prospects for reaching an agreement with the United States on the limitation of strategic arms.

According to the translation of the speech supplied by Tass, the government press agency, Mr.

Brezhnev said:
"We agree with President Ford that, in the nearest months to come, work will be concluded on an agreement on this question." He added that "the course toward improving Soviet-American relations that has taken shape in recent years has been confirmed and developed further."

The certainty with which Mr. Brezhnev apparently spoke surlost seats in elections for both houses of the Diet. Since the prised some observers here, since it commits the Soviet Union to the success of negotiations that party has been sharply split be-tween the factions supporting Mr. Tanaka and those supportare still highly complicated, despite the reported "breakthroughs" of the weekend talks. In a separate section on the Middle East, Mr. Brezhnev indirectly criticized the United States. Israel, he said, pursues "brazen provocative policy... with obvious support from out-

Geneva Talks

Mr. Brezhnev repeated the Soviet call for the "earliest re-sumption" of the Geneva peace conference and described decision of the recent Arab summit at Rabat recognizing the Palestine Liberation Organization as the representative of the Palestinian people as "very con-

Presumably, Mr. Arafat will remain in the Soviet capital long enough to see Mr. Brezhnev, who should be back by Thursday. Mr. Arafat is seeking what amounts to diplomatic recognition from the Kremlin.) The passages on China in Mr. Brezhnev's wide-ranging speech today were particularly significant because the Russians had not reacted specifically to the Chinese declaration of willingness to con-clude a nonaggression pact. Much of the Chinese proposal has not even been published here.

"At first glance, it would seem that the leaders of the People's Republic of China also come out for normalizing relations with the Soviet Union. The trouble how-ever is that their words are divorced from their deeds," Mr. Brezhnev said.

"Actually, Peking advances as a preliminary condition, no more. less than the demand for withdrawal of Soviet frontier guards from a number of areas of our territory to which the Chinese leaders have now decided to make claims," he continued. Peking Leaders Said To Write to Nixon

PEKING, Nov. 26 (UPI).— Secretary of State Henry Kissinger today met for the fourth time with Chinese leaders in 24 hours and U.S. officials disclosed that the Chinese leadership has been in contact with former President Richard Nixon since his resignation.

Both Mr. Kissinger and Deputy Premier Teng Hsiao-ping hinted that Mr. Kissinger soon would invite one of Mao Tse-tung's top aides to Washington for the first time. The hints came in offhand remarks during Mr. Kissinger's talks with Mr. Teng and Foreign Minister Chiso Kuan-hua, U.S. officials said Peking leaders have sent at least two letters to Mr. Nixon since his Aug. 9 resignation of the presidency. The contents of the letters and whether Mr. Nixon replied were not immediately revealed.

Nixon Toasted

Mr. Nixon's reputation has not suffered here because of the Watergate scandal that led to his resignation. Mr. Chiao singled out a toast at last night's state banquet for Mr. Kiscinger.

Mr. Chizo cited "the pioneering role of Richard M. Nixon" in reopening relations with China Explaining the change-over from Mr. Nixon to President Ford has been one of Mr. Kissinger's tasks in his talks with Mr. Chiao and Mr. Teng. Mr. Kissinger has said that U.S. policy toward China under Mr. Ford is the same as it had been under Mr. Nixon and the Chinese have applauded that assertion.

The other side of the negotiating table was changed, too. Gone was ailing Premier Chou En-lai, who handled most of the negotiations on Mr. Kissinger's six previous visits to Peking.

Mr. Kissinger saw Mr. Chou for a half-hour vesterday after his arrival, but the meeting was held in a hospital, and little of diniomatic substance was discussed. In a message to Congress, Mr. Ford did not detail his reasons for feeling that further cuts in the budget submitted by former president Richard Nixon in Jannary would be unwise. Saigon to Curb Opposition Rally Protesting Trial

SAIGON, Nov. 26 (AP).-The South Vietnamese government announced today that it will suppress a street demonstration planned to coincide with Thursday's trial of three opposition newspapers.

The commander of the Saigon military region made the announcement less than 24 hours after the predominantly Catholic anti-corruption movement pub-licized plans for a demonstration Thursday by between 10,000 and 20,000 Catholics, students, laborers and disabled veterans.

The movement said the participants would gather at a sub-urban Catholic church for a mass, then "march peacefully" on the downtown area, stopping for short vigils at several government buildings, including the presidential palace.

The command claimed "there exists a plot aimed at exerting pressure against the court dur-ing the trial" and said it would therefore "provide security protection at the court and surrounding areas.'

The trial had been scheduled for Oct. 31, but was postponed at the last minute when opposi-tion groups and police clashed.

Tunis Mulls Hijackers' Fate, But Trial Is Believed Unlikely

TUNIS, Nov. 26 (Reuters),-Tunisian authorities will take several days to decide the fate of four Arab guerrillas who hijacked a British airliner but it is not likely that they will face trial, for fear of reprisals, informed sources said today. "There are many elements to be taken into consideration and the government is likely to want to study all angles of the ques-tion first," they said. One element is the fear that Tunisian diplomatic missions or interests abroad could be threatened with guerrilla reprisals, the sources said.

It is also considered unlikely that they will simply be released because of the certain outcry from foreign governments—espe-cially that of West Germany because a West German banker was killed on the jet by the men.

The hijackers are believed to villas just outside Tunis.

Reports said seven other guerrillas, who were freed from Egyptian and Dutch jails and flown here at the demand of the hijackers, were being held in a barracks in the city.

The Palestine Liberation Organization has asked for the hijackers to be handed over to it and Tunislan officials have said the fate of the gunmen will be decided in consultation with the PLO. But PLO representative Abou

Iyad, who took part in the long negotiations to rescue the hostages on the jet, left here last night after talks with President Habib Bourguibe. The newspaper L'Action said

Magruder has testified in this trial that Mr. Mitchell approved the intelligence-gathering plan. But another former Mitchell aide, Frederick LaRue, has given the court testimony backing Mr. Mitcell's account.

Mr. Mitchell, 61, one of five former Nixon aides being tried for alleged conspiracy to obstruct justice, was the first of them to go on the witness stand

He was relaxed, was in apparent good humor and answered questions rapidly.

Earlier today, defendant H.R. Haldeman's lawyer said that his client, the former White House chief of staff, "did not enter into a conspiracy . . . did not intend to enter into a conspiracy" to cover up the Watergate affair.

Haldeman's Opening

Attorney John Wilson opened Mr. Haldeman's defense by telling the jury that the defendant knew very little about Watergate until former White House counsel John Dean 3d's disclosures on March

Mr. Wilson said that there is very little on the White House Watergate tapes that show Mr. Haldeman "in the role of a planner." and that his client had been "more frequently in the role of a reporter telling Mr. Nixon what he learned, recently learned or had been told not what he knew or participated in."

The Haldeman attorney began his opening statement by telling in judgment" on Mr. Haldeman's fate and that "much depends on your believing him and his role in this case." He told the jury it must understand Mr. Haldeman's "reliance on the integrity and guidance" of Richard Nixon. The lawyer said that Mr. Halde-man had relied on information supplied by Dean, who "kept telling everyone no one in the White House was involved. Then came the discussion of March 21." Mr. Wilson recited the charges against Mr. Haldeman and denied his client was guilty on each one. Yesterday, after the prosecution ended its case—having presented 28 witnesses and introduced 31 tape recordings since the trial's start on Oct. 1—lawyer William Hundley opened the Mitchell defense by saying that the former attorney general was a scapegoat whose "loyalty and belief in his president" kept him from exposing transgressions in the Nixon

White House. "The evidence will show clearly the lovalty was not reciprocated." Mr. Mitchell's attorney said.

The other cover-up defendants are former White House domestic affairs adviser John Ehrlichman, former Assistant Attorney Gen-eral Robert Mardian and Kenneth Parkinson, onetime Nixon ction committee counsel.

The First Thanksgiving Table

GAINESVILLE, Fla., Nov. 26 (AP).—Eldon Turner, a University of Florida history professor specializing in the U.S. Colonial period, says there were no turkeys on the menu during the first Thanksgiving feast in 1621.

that Jews "own, as you know, the banks in this country, the newspapers," and had such a strong lobby "you wouldn't believe it."

His words were hotly disputed in the committee. Gen. Brown apologized and has been chided by President Ford, but Sen. Thomas McIntyre, D-N.H., declared that the remarks raised questions both about Gen. Brown's judgment and about his usefulness to continue as head of the Joint Chiefs.

Sen. McIntyre called for the general's resignation and de-manded that he be called before the committee to testify about the incident.

'Stupid Remarks'

"Gen. Brown showed himself to be rather stupid," Sen. Mc-Intyre told reporters. "The general's statement was more than just a stab at the Jewish lobby. Does he feel our policy in the Mideast is incorrect? Does he feel the No. 1 military man should be commenting on it and making such stupid remarks as he made? It's a matter of civilian control of the military."

Sen. Stennis, however, opposed Sen. McIntyre's demand for a hearing, and carried the committee with him. Only Senators Mc-Intyre, Henry Jackson, D-Wash., Stuart Symington, D-Mo., and Harold Hughes, D-Iowa, voted for the motion.

Sen. Stennis said: "I think he's a very fine military officer. If he was arrogant, unyielding, uncompromising, that would be a different matter." But since he had recognized his error and shown contrition, Sen. Stennis said, the incident was closed. Sen. McIntyre said he believed that Jewish organizations had reduced pressure for Gen. Brown's ouster, lest this give proof to his description of the "inexorable power of the Jewish lobby." In Sacramento, Gen. Brown said yesterday he was "awed and appalled" by the reaction to his

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26 (WP). -Nelson Rockefeller was attacked by the far left and right, was accused of killing unborn chil-dren and hardened criminals and was supported by a black group resterday as the House Judiciary Committee continued hearings on his nomination to be vice-presi-

Arthur Eve, a black New York State assemblyman who was chairman of the observer team at the 1971 Attica State Prison riot, accused Mr. Rockefeller, then governor, of "engineering the massacre," in which 43 lives were lost when state police retook the prison. Mr. Eve criticized Mr. Rockefeller for not going to Attics and for sending the police in with guns. Several committee members observed that Mr. Eve was stating his conclusions, not proved facts.

Curtis Dall, for the conservative Liberty Lobby, opposed the nomination on a number of grounds, including his statement that Mr. Rockefeller masterminded adop-tion of the 25th Amendment, under which he was nominated, to find a backdoor way to the White House, which Mr. Dall said he not win by conventional political means.

Anti-Abortion Group

Dr. Ada Ryan, speaking against Mr. Rockefeller for the National Right to Life Committee, said of Mr. Rockefeller, "In his quest for population control at any cost he has helped to bring about the destruction of a whole segment of our society-the unborn The anti-abortionists oppose Mr. Rockefeller because he vetoed a bill to repeal New York's abor-

Jeanne Mirer, opposing Mr. Rockefeller for the National Lawyers' Guild, a leftist group, read off a long list of statistics of the Rockefeller family's control over major parts of the economy. These were figures Democrats have sought but have not been able to have furnished. Asked the source of the statistics, Mrs. Mirer said it was the Village Voice, a weekly liberal newspaper in New York City.

This caused Rep. David Dennis, R-Ind., to observe that the committee "has heard a lot of testimony today with very little merit.

We've had it from the left and the right, and none of it's worth anything. There are reasons to be against Mr. Rockefeller, but we're not hearing them."

Conservative Opposition

The American Conservative Union also opposed Mr. Rockefeller. A statement prepared by Barbara Keating, Conservativeparty candidate for the Senate from New York, criticized Mr. Rockefeller especially for his abortion stand, although the ACU has not polled its membership on the issue. Miss Keating said it would be "all but impossible to find an issue of such importance on which there are such diametrically opposed views held by a President and a man he has chosen to be vice-president."

The only support for Mr. Rockefeller yesterday came from the Council of 100, a black Republican

Ford Vetoes Bill On More School Aid for Veterans

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26 (AP). -President Ford today vetoed a bill that would have increased veterans' education benefits by 22.7 per cent. He called on Congress to enact a bill that will be less inflationary, increasing benefits by 18.2 per cent.

Press Secretary Ronald Nessen said that Mr. Ford expected that the Democratic-controlled Congress might override the veto.

Mr. Ford said that he was prepared to accept a veterans' benefits increase of roughly 20 per cent, but that he could not justify two "defects" measure, a provision for $600-ayear loans for veterans who were unable to get financing from other federal agencies and also extension from 36 to 45 months of veterans' eligibility for undergraduate college training.

Mr. Ford earlier had suggested an 182-per-cent increase for most education benefits for 4 million eligible post-Korea veterans and 7 million Vietnam era veterans.

Mr. Nessen said that the President told the congress leaders, "Believe me, it wasn't an easy decision."

Coal Union Panel Accepts U.S. Pact

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26 (AP). -Regional leaders of the United Mine Workers, reversing themselves, today approved a contract offer from the coal industry and agreed to put it to a vote by the union's 120,000 members, who have been on strike for 14 days, UMW president Arnold Miller announced the bargaining council's approval and said that if the membership ratifies the pact, it may be possible to reopen the mines sometime next week.

The council had rejected the proposed contract, 21-11, earlier in the day but within hours reconvened and changed its position. Mr. Miller gave no reason for the change, other than to say that it was part of the "democratic process working at its finest."

Spanish Cardinal Denounces the Falange

By Miguel Acoca

MADRID, Nov. 26 (WP).-In a rebuke to the Falange—Spain's only authorized political partyfor allegedly opposing others' political freedom, Vicente Cardinal Enrique y Tarancon, president of this nation's Catholic Bishops' Conference, yesterday urged the church to support all those seeking to create a multiparty democracy here.

The cardinal made a speech devoted largely to the political situation as he opened the hish-ops' annual Madrid conference on spiritual and temporal problems of the church in Spain. Although Cardinal Tarancon left no doubt that he war attacking the Falange, he did not name the militant right-wing organization, which has occupied a privileged position since Generalissimo Francisco Franco's Civil War victory 35 years ago. Reconciliation Goal

The church leader criticized the party's recent "emotional" allusions to its role in the war, charging that the allusions constituted a "grave obstacle to the reconciliation" of Spaniards divided since the conflict. Reconciliation, he amounced, will be the main theme of the conference, which will end this weekend; He said that the church's position on the peaceful coexistence of all Spaniards will be made public following a debate by the bishops. While attacking the extreme right, he also said that the church could not back Communism because of its "atheistic doctrine." But he made it clear that the church recognizes the right of Spaniards to different political views. The Communist party has been outlawed in Spain The cardinal asserted that the church could not identify itself with any political group but had to work for civil rights, political freedom reconciliation and justice for all Spaniards. Limited Activity

His speech was his most significant political statement this year, when Spain has been divided by the issue of permitting limited political associations to operate. The issue is being de-bated by the government and by the National Council, Spain's upper chamber, which is controlled by the Falange and other

ADDIS ABABA, Nov. 26 (Renters).—Ethiopia's military rulers plotting for his personal a said today that Lt. Gen. Aman Andom, 50, the chairman of the provisional military government, was killed in his house during a gun battle Saturday night.

An announcement said Gen. Aman was considered a security risk and had been asked repeatedly to give himself up.

"His refusal compelled the Military Council to resort to force and in the ensuing exchange of fire at his residence, the gen-eral was killed and three security men wounded," the announcement

The Supreme Military Council, the announcement said, ordered the execution of 59 former civilian officials and military officers Saturday night because "they had been found guilty of maladministration, hindering fair administration of justice, selling secret documents of the country to foreign agents and attempting to disrupt the present Ethiopian popular movement."

Listed as Executed The Supreme Military Council did not say who found them guilty. Previously, Gen. Aman was listed as executed along with the 59 other persons killed Satur-house arrest on Friday and was killed at his home, which is on the grounds of the Princess Tsehai Hospital, the following night when soldiers of the Supreme Military Council forced their way in to arrest him. The Military Council, a 120member body, today listed six reasons why it considered Gen. Aman a security risk.

for the traffic of toda Today we're introducing the Volvo 244.

We don't change for the sake of change – but to provide greater safety, comfort, durability and economy. That's why all the way back in 1966 Volvo had features that still rank among the best of today. The seats were designed in collaboration with medical experts. The brakes were dual circuit, triangular so that they would retain 80% of the braking power should one of the circuits fail. The passenger compartment was surrounded by energyabsorbing zones, three-point seat belts were standard. And the rust-protection was superior to most other cars.

Volvo lasts long and that Volvo durability places a great responsibility on our shoulders. That's why we're now introducing the Volvo 240 series - a whole new generation of Volvos. The 242, 244 DL and GL, and 245 DL.

The robust, tried and tested 2 litre engine B 20 F, featuring a continuous injection fuel delivery system, gives lots of power Yet run on low octane petrol. Year after year. Spring strut, front suspension. Rack and pinion steering. Broad rims. Steel radial tyres and much improved rear suspension, make the Volvo 240 series great cars for the road and comfortable too! The new seats have a greater adjustability. And the adjustable lumbar support has been made even better than before. We've increased the efficiency of the heating and ventilation system, and the twelve airducts are evenly distributed throughout the passenger compartment. The braking system has a new, unique braking cylinder with two steps. Should one braking circuit fail, the pedal travel will remain practically unchanged. Our experiences of the Volvo safety project - VESC have been applied to the full. The energy-absorbing front has been made even more effective.

And we have used more hot-galvanized parts to extend the long life of a Volvo.

The Volvo 242-two door sedan, 244-four door sedan and 245 station wagon are cars of today - ready for the driving world

U.S. Said to Assist Cambodia on Air Targets

By John Burgess

BANGKOK, Nov. 26 (WP) .--American military analysts are making recommendations on bombing targets in Communistcontrolled areas of Cambodia to the military command in Pimom Penh, according to a well-placed U.S. military source,

The recommendations, based on aerial reconnaissance flights conducted several times daily by U.S. jets, are in apparent violation of the congressional ban of a direct U.S. military role in Cambodia.

A congressional source said he thought the ban, which went into effect Aug. 15, 1973, definitely prohibited any advisory role for Americans in the Cambodia fight-

Seeking Law Beneath the Sea

The attempt of Norway and the Soviet Union to work out some lawful distribution of the lands beneath the sea to which they both lay claim involves a diplomatic venture resembling a wrestling match by scuba divers in a bed of kelp. The law of the sea, as a number of recent conferences have demonstrated, is as complex as Byzantine theology, and the practical reasons for resolving its dilemmas are many and vital to the whole world. The frictions that its obscurities have engendered are as varied as the codfish war off Iceland and the conflicting claims of Greece and Turkey to the seabed near their shores. But few of the disputes over the land beneath the sea have as tangled a history as that which is, fortunately in muted form, developing in Europe's extreme northern waters.

Both Norway and the Soviet Union want the oil that lies beneath the Barents Sea, where Norway curls around the northern end of Scandinavia and meets that part of the Soviet Union which was seized from Finland during World War II. The Barents is a very important sea highway for the northern ports of the Soviet Union and it is bounded on the north, more or less, by the Svalbard Archipelago, whose chief island is Spitsbergen. Just what line can be drawn to separate the Norwegian share of the continental shelf from that of the Soviet Union is difficult to decide, given the fluid state Of the law of the sea, And then there is Spitsbergen itself, which would be essential to any exploitation of oil resources in the Spitsbergen is a barren land-on the surface, at least-which has a checkered history. There were many wrangles there, in centuries past, over whaling, as the northern European nations hunted whales around the island and boiled the blubber ashore. As whaling diminished, so did interest in Spitsbergen, until its coal beds began to take on significance. Norway claimed the archipelago, but its assertions were not agreed to until 1920. And even then the Norwegians shared the coal mines with the Soviet Union.

Spitsbergen and the Barents Sea were the scene of much naval activity during World War II, but Norway's sovereignty over the islands is now legally unchallenged. Whether and how the new energy developments will alter this status is one of the critical points in the negotiations now beginning in Mos-

For the moment, these negotiations are bilateral. But as a case history in the development of the law of the sea, with all its implications for a world that needs the sea for transport and for the wealth that lies beneath the surface, no country can afford to ignore the Barents Sea. If the last frontier on earth is to be used rationally and equitably, avoiding the accumulation of ills that accompanied man's conquest of the soil that lies above the low-water mark, such bargaining as is now going on in Moscow must be watched with care, not only because of the importance of the oil of the Barents, but for all the precedents that might be drawn from it.

Semi-Independence

One year after hearing President Nixon's brave talk of Project Independence, the federal government has managed to assemble the data needed to start formulating a national energy policy. It has gone little

The target date of 1980, unrealistic from the moment it was uttered, has quietly been extended to 1985 for the culmination of national planning. The real goal of Project Independence is more modest than that enunciated by Nixon: "to meet America's energy needs from America's own energy resources." Now, according to the Federal Energy Administration, the objective is "to reduce United States vulnerability to disruptions of energy imports"—a far more practical effort.

It is a commentary of sorts on the relatively primitive nature of the government's energy expertise that it has taken this long merely to amass the information about energy use and availability on which the policy choices will have to be based. The Project Independence report released this month, all 800 pages of analysis, contains few actual policy proposals.

Yet two themes, not entirely palatable to the administration or to the major energy industries, weave through all the analyses: first, the desirability and feasibility of a strong energy conservation program and, second. strong arguments for the government to take a more active role in directing how energy is to be used than a traditional freemarketeer would like. Both these themes are directly contrary to the previous energy studies that formed the analytical basis for whatever passed as energy policy.

Though the previous studies of 1971 and 72 recognized the possibility of politically inspired interruptions in the flow of oil from abroad, the guiding assumption was that "political, economic, and logistical considerations would not restrict the availability of foreign oil." This naive assumption led to a projected growth rate in energy consumption of about 4.2 per cent yearly. Now, sadder but wiser, the government energy planners concur in the estimate of the Ford Foundation's energy policy project for a long-term growth rate of 2 per cent.

Could the United States in fact be selfsufficient in energy by 1985? Yes, the FEA study concludes, but only if the price of crude oil remained at the dangerously high level of $11 per barrel. "This would imply consistently higher domestic energy prices, a reduction in real gross national product, inflation, and possible local or sectoral economic dislocations," the FEA states. Reducing America's vulnerability, therefore, is not necessarily to advocate a program of zeroimports.

The Project Independence working group has not given the federal government an energy policy. Many of its specific findings on energy alternatives to fossil fuels or the means of conserving energy in transportation and industrial sectors are already points of heated dispute. But at least the federal government has its own data, relatively independent from pressure-group bias, and can no longer use the necessity of getting the facts as an excuse for avoiding the difficult decisions of project even semi-independence.

Ethiopian Killings

This was a carefully planned seizure of power from within by a group of ambitious and conscienceless men by means which have proved fatal to the genuine aims of the more idealistic supporters of the Ethioplan revolution. It is not enough to deplore such a terrible lapse into savagery. The new group have in their power perhaps another 200 prisoners, and every effort ought to be made by those with influence in Addis Ababa to save them from a like fate.

India's Nuclear Ambitions

The political echoes of India's nuclear explosion have by no means died away. In spite of the feeling of self-confidence it induced at home, it must be causing the government a considerable headache. Pakistan has now proposed to the UN that South Asla be declared a nuclear-free zone and has received support not only from Nepal and Sri Lanks, but from Bangladesh and Afghanistan—two country not normally numbered among Pakistan's staunchest allies. And India's protestations that it would never engage in nuclear war begin to look suspect when it opposes this resolution, in spite of having given open support to a similar one on the Middle East out forward by the Shah of Iran. The misglvings are strengthened by the inability of India's Atomic Energy Commission to find a plausible explanation of what they mean by the "peaceful, commercial exploitation" of nuclear explosions. -From the Neue Zuercher Zeitung (Zurich).

Italian Communists

The electoral statistics suggest that about two-thirds of Italy's mainly conscript army of 306,000 men supports the Communist party . . . This may not matter very much provided the Italian Communist party continues to pursue in office the policies it has for long pursued in opposition . . . Unconfirmed reports from Bologna suggest they might agree to Italy's remaining in NATO on the grounds that the existence of the Warsaw Pact justifies NATO. The Italian Communists do not preach world revolution and do not say that once in power they would intend to keep it by oppressive means. But will Mr. Kissinger—let alone the Senate Foreign Relations Committee—believe them? What evidence have they to do so?

PARIS.-The regulation which demands that an automobilist make a declaration of the amount of naphtha in the tank of his vehicle at the gates of Paris is a most annoying one. It is all the more useless masmuch that the tanks vary in shape and size, and are, for the most part, concealed under the seats of the vehicle, thus making all serious verification impossible. There is one department where they want to tax petroleum bicycles. Where will they stop?

DARIS-There has been much public talk about a pentagonal world founded upon relationships between the United States, Russia, China, Japan and Western Europe and there has also been talk (now less often heard) about a triangular world based on a balance between the first three. But the quintessential policy devised by President Nixon with Henry Kissinger's aid and now, it would seem, embraced by President Ford, still rests on the superpower balance between the United States and the Soviet Union. One principal factor contributing to Washington's original shift in attitudes toward Peking was the desire to approach Moscow through the back door. Nixon and Kissinger realized the American diplomatic posture would seem flabby to the Kremlin so long as Washington had no contact at all with the largest nation on earth because the United States insisted on the ridiculous pretense that Taiwan, an offshore island, represented 800 million Chinese. It if some loony capital 1814 claimed the exiled Napoleon's domain of Elba spoke for "France."

To approach Mao Tse-tung, Nixon used the Romanian leader, Ceaucescu, to herald what was coming and then sent Kissinger on a secret trip to Peking via Pakistan, Indeed, so eager was the American administration to curry Chinese favor that its policy deliberately "tilted" against India, China's adversary

The Future

As Kissinger himself expressed it the Peking and Moscow summits following the U.S. policy switch differed accordingly: Nixon's China trip marked a bifurcation in the road, an event that could lead to major changes by Peking. But it left much for the future, and one could not judge its accomplishments. The Moscow summit sought agreements that would be justifying in themselves. It hoped either to achieve accord on the SALT disarmament discussions or a breakthrough leading to accord.

Now, after the Ford-Brezhnev Vladivostok meeting, both the American and Soviet sides stress that breakthrough has come. Should this prove true, it would mark an enormous step. But it will take months before we know the answer.

In the meantime Kissinger has bounced over to China again to explain his ideas and presumably. among other things, to stress that the United States had nothing to do with selecting Vladivostok as a site for talks, a city whose governance by Moscow is not yet wholly endorsed by Peking.

The Chinese are less than enthusiastic with their designated role as a U.S. stepping stone to Russia. They have cooled their never oven-like warmth toward Washington and are disappointed with their old friend Kissinger. Trade with America hasn't reached promised levels. There is irritation with U.S. attitudes on Cambodia.

Admires Nixon

Moreover, Peking makes plain it still admires Nixon more than Ford, Chou En-lai commenting to me on Watergate a year ago, said: "You have had such things occur in your society and undoubtedly will again." Chou often seen as the man at the top who is America's best friend is now sick and old-as is Mao, who accepted his analyses and received Nixon, Chiao Kuan-hua, the new foreign minister, is a Chou man who liked David Bruce, first my life with my toes curling in conflict to explode in the Palestine area and is busily sending the Arabs even more arms than the United States is sending Is-conflict, after it has been ignited. Finally, Russia can force Washington to admit the Soviet Union has a cardinal role in peace nego-tiations. We will know the answer on this long, long before we know whether the promised nuclear arms limitation means much in checking the race to holocaust

A Negative View

Israel, South Africa And the UN Assembly

By William F. Buckley Jr.

NEW YORK—The day before South Africa strategists saw their yassir Arafat addressed the opportunity. UN General Assembly, a move was taken against South Africa. the implications of which harmonize with the invitation to Arafat, and possibly outweigh it. The two episodes suggest what has struck many observers of the UN as inevitable: namely, that the General Assembly of the UN is going down into that state of ratified uselessness which its irresponsibility has invited.

Concerning South Africa, here is the background. a) Everybody dislikes apartheid. b) Everybody is supposed to dislike all forms of tyranny. c) In fact, at the UN. tyranny-defined as rule by the minority, by force—is the modus vivendi of most of the voters. The tyrannies range from such absolute despotisms as China's, to the comparatively benign despotism of, say, Kenya. d) But the UN mobilizes are those that are either counter-revolutionary in nature (e.g. Chile's), or racial: specifically, white against black (South Africa, Rhodesia). White against white (Russia) is all right, and black against brown (Uganda) is all right, but not white against black. e) Accordingly, South Africa has been the special target of the highly speci-fied moralism of General Assembly rhetoric.

Charter Limit

Now the problem arose a year ago: What could the General Assembly do about South Africa, given that the Charter prescribes that only the Security Council can admit a member to the UN, and only the Security Council can expel a member. In the Security Council, anti-South African specialists correctly concluded, Britain, the United States, and France would veto any move for expul-

So they hit on the idea of "denying" the credentials of the ambassador dispatched by the government of South Africa as its representative. Now in order to get a seat in the General Assembly, a thing called the Credentials Committee receives the papers of a delegate, and satisfies itself that these are properly executed by a responsible official of the government dispatching said delegate to New York (usually the secretary of state, or his equivalent). This is a purely formal operation, but in it, the anti-

Why not either pack the Credentials Committee so that it will "deny" the authenticity of the letter of accreditation; or, if they don't succeed there, why not ack the General Assembly to vote to reject the conclusion of the Credeutials Committee? Last year, the gang took this strategy right to the brink. The General Assembly stopped just short of taking the credentials away from the South African

This time they went all the way. First they asked for South Africa's expulsion, which was vetoed. Then they denied the accreditation. And now by a vote of 99 to 22, the General Assembly has denied the South African representative the right to set foot inside the UN. This is, of course, the equivalent of ejecting South Africa. To be a member of the UN without the right to select your own ambassador makes membership in the UN an ab-

Cheaper Outside

So South Africa will soon discover what Taiwan has discov-ered. That life outside the UN is altogether possible. Indeed, it is cheaper, and allows a country that extraordinary liberation of divesting itself from institutional attachments altogether hypocritical in nature.
The UN's simultaneous invitation to Arafat of the PLO to speak as the representative of the Palestinian people undermines the constitutional structure of the UN, which although it hasn't always recognized de facto governments, has never recognized governments in exile. The temptation to do this arose last year in connection with Cambodia. If the General Assembly, following its own logic, declines at the next session to recognize the Israeli ambassador, it might go so far as to rule that Arafat is the logical representative of the Israeli people.

To such preposterous lengths the General Assembly is apparently willing to go, and the result. of course, will be that it will gradually phase out as an organ with which serious people do business. Its passage from the scene would leave this observer dry-eyed, but the tragedy is that in the process, it is coaxing along another war in the Mideast, and this could be the big one.

The Price of Détente

pecially here in the Near East, the Soviet Union and its friends are making great gains at American expense. The world is paying a high price for detente, and the United States, far from glowing cheerfully, should be flying warning signals.

The most striking sign of Soviet success is the blow which has been delivered to Henry Kissinger's plan for a political settlement here in the Near East. The basic idea was for a step-by-step approach toward accord between Israel and Egypt. Since Egypt would not go it alone, another Arab partner had to be found for each step of the talks. designated partner for the next stage was Jordan.

Israel and Syria. Each—and maybe not wrongly-suspects the other of wanting a new round of fighting. The renewed threat of war increases Syrian dependence on Russia, which is the principal supplier of weapons to So acute is the danger that even the Exyptians have felt constrained to turn to Moscow. Mr. Brezhnev is due in Cairo in January for talks which may well mark the resumption of full-scale Soviet military assistance to Exypt.

Thus since last spring, when Cairo and Damascus were both bashing Moscow with a vengeance, there has been a complete Soviet comeback in the Near East. Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko has played his hand masterfully, and American prospects are correspondingly dark.

Inflation has sapped the will of almost all other European countries. Even the doughty Helmut Schmidt in West Germany is having to ease off his determination to govern with authority. Valery Giscard d'Estaing in France is turning out to be about as friendly to the United States as Gen. de Gaulle. So from the Soviet point of view, the European situation could hardly be more favorable.

Japan's Role

Except for Iran, weakness approaching disintegration marks the countries of South Asia, and in East Asia opportunity beckons the Russians. As the fall of Premier Kakuei Tanaka indicates. the Japanese have not figured out the role they are going to play in a world transfigured by the sudden spurt in the prices and importance of basic commodities. Tokyo is more than ever open to Soviet blandishment.

The Chinese—by the hint of a settlement of the border dispute which they dropped in the Nov. 7 note to Russia-have underlined a strong future possibility. That is that Peking, while not making it up with Moscow, will at least stop treating the Russians as Public Enemy No. 1 when Mac Tre-tung dies.

In these conditions, there is n place for American elation abou the Vladivostok agreement. It a useful supplement to the 19._ SALT accord at best. Far from exulting about breakthroughs, American officials ought now to be especially wary. The Russians are on the move, and this is just the wrong time to let down the

What is more, he has effectively silenced the charge that this makes him a museum piece whose ideas are not in step with the Christian Democrats' search for an up-to-date image.

In last month's Bayarian state elections, the Christian Social Union, a party totally under Mr. Strauss's domination, captured 62 per cent of the vote—the biggest margin in Bavaria's posthistory. A victory on that scale in the country's second-largest state made it lucidly clear that Mr. Strauss is still a potent vote getter.

It also greatly strengthened Mr. Strauss's hand within the curious: balance of forces that represent Germany.

tian -Democratic parties: Mr. Strauss's Christian Social Union, which is confined to Bavaria, and the Christian Democratic Union, which operates in the nine other states. Although separate, the two maintain a joint caucus in federal parliament, and in national elections they have always united behind a single candidate for chancellor.

Since the CDU has no chance of winning a parliamentary majority without the support of the Bavarian party, Mr. Strauss has had what amounts to veto power over past choices of a candidate ranks. In terms of his own ambitions however, this situation.

has worked against him. As a regional party with its base in a state that is heavily Catholic. rural and conservative, the CSU stands perceptibly to the right of the CDU, which must appeal to a more broadly based constituency. In addition, there is the fact that Bavaria fits into the German political context in a highly individualistic, larger-thanlife way that is not exactly to the taste of its sister states.

حكذا من الأجل

In the past, these factors have enabled the CDU to head off Mr. Strauss's bids for the nomination for chancellor, on the ground that he would have limited appeal in non-Catholic, urbanized northern half of Germany.

Also counting heavily against him has been the knowledge that his-demagogic red-batting and his nationalistic image as a "Bava-rian Bismarck" stir uneasy memories among West Germany's neighbors in both Western and Eastern Europe.

Then too, Mr. Strauss's setbacks over the years have often been due in no small measure to his own excesses. In 1962, when he was riding high as defense minister, his career came perilously close to self-destruction through the Spiegel affair, with its alle-gations that he had tried to plug security leaks by ordering the illegal arrest of one of the magazine's editors.

Visit to New York Even in more recent years, his efforts to broaden his constituency have been marred by his predilection for over-indulgence strong Bavarian beer and incidents like the time in 1971 when he allegedly was assaulted and robbed by three prostitutes while on a visit to New York.

This time, however, things may e different. Mr. Strauss's new allure at the polls seems to in-dicate quite clearly that many Germans are discouraged by what they perceive as drift, blckering excessive permissiveness in the Social Democratic ranks. They also are very frightened at of almost uninterrupted economic boom, West Germany is headed

In the climate of uncertainty that has resulted, there is an undoubted appeal in Mr. Strauss's calls for replacing "socialist ex-periments" with fiscal austerity, for Germany to play a more commanding role in the affairs of the European Economic Community and for a general return to oldfashioned morality and patrio-

Big Oil Firms Exploiting Geothermal Fields

Raising Fears of Domination in U.S.

By George Alexander

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 26 .- With little fanfare, but with great purposefulness and skill, the major American oil companies are rapidly coming to dominate U. S. geothermal resources the underground reservoirs of steam. scalding water and hot rock strata that are often hailed as a potentially significant new source of energy for the future. Wherever there is a hint of a geothermal field, almost invariably, it appears, the land above has been leased to a major oil

Almost everyone interviewed for this report accepted the acquisition of geothermal resources by the big oil companies as in-evitable. They all saw both bad and good in this prospect, but in varying proportions.

"Better to have big oil develop these resources," said a government official who declined to be identified, "than a bunch of small promoters who jump hoping to make a big, fast buck and then go broke and run out or who admit, very belatedly, they can't meet the [environmental] requirements and leave the public holding the bag.

"So I feel big oil is preferable. with the proviso"—here, the official paused and then spoke with emphasis—"with the proviso that we can make an honest person of the industry."

His concern, he explained, was not so much that the major oil firms would do anything blatantly illegal or dishonest in developing geothermal resources, but rather that they would not compete against each other any more vigorously than they have in oil and gas.

That same fear of control exerted by a few producers over a commodity sought by many consumers was expressed by others. The actions of the major oil companies are not likely to put such fears to rest quickly.

Consider the Geysers, since what has been happening and is happening there may be a pattern of what is to come. The Geysers is an area 70 miles north of San Francisco whose underlying rock layers produce abundant quantities of relatively clean steam, used by Pacific Gas and Electric, the utility for northern California, to

PG and E, the only U.S. utility to use geothermal energy as part of its overall capacity, buys that steam from the partnership of Union Oil, Magma Power Co. and Thermal Power Co.

The cost of Geysers steam is tied to the cost of oil and gas used the preceding year. As the cost of oil goes up, so automatically does the cost of geothermal

William Gallavan, the manager of PG and E's rate department, defended this on the basis of geothermal steam's value to other fuels. "As the cost of some fuels increases," he said, referring to oil and natural cas. "they tend to bring up the value of other types, such as geothermal.
"If we had to use oil in those plants, instead of steam, to generate an equivalent amount of electricity, we should have to pay that much or more." Question Remains

But precisely because the nine plants at the Geysers use steam. other competitive demand for that steam, the question remains: Why does the utility allow the price of one fuel source to be

The growing number of major oil companies engaged in varying and development—all of which are acquiring leaseholds on fedstate and privately owned land throughout the western United States — raises another worrisome question: unitization. Unitization is the practice of several oil companies' consolidating their holdings in a certain area and designating one firm to operate it for the benefit of all It is often depicted as a conservation measure.

"I'm not sure that unitization can be applied to geothermal resources," said a legal expert who is studying the matter at the

"In the unitization of an oilfield," he said, "you at least have separate development and marketing functions. The different firms may work together to bring up the oil, but then they can transport it elsewhere to sell, even—theoretically, at leastagainst each other.

"But how are you going to market steam separately from where you develop it? I'm not sure that there could be independent marketing of the product in geothermal; it's a different dimension than oil." Some observers, like Charles Paldwin, are bothered by what they regard as the oil industry's narrow view of the potential of geothermal fields. Mr. Baldwin, an energy consultant to the California Senate's Committee on Governmental Organization, is critical of the major companies' obsession with geothermal energy to generate electricity, to the exclusion of other applications.

"There's a long list of other uses," he said. "Home heating and cooling. Freezing produce, Kiln drying of lumber. Drying nuts and prumes. Underground circulation of hot brine, in pipes. to heat soil and accelerate seed germination. And there are a lot of industrial uses as well.

"So when you ask how I view the oil companies domination of this key energy source, I would have to say it is good from the standpoint of generating electrical power, but bad from the standpoint of the other uses I just described. The assessment is unchallenged by oil representatives. Clint Dahlstrom of Standard Oil of California, citing the dif-ficulties of transmitting raw geothermal energy over appreciable distances, said frankly: "We don't see any probability of nonelectrical uses being very significant."

That attitude toward alternate uses of geothermal energy, Mr. Baldwin believes, is largely due to the structure of the oil industry and the well-established ways in which it has done business. C Los Angeles Times.

PARIS, Nov. 26 (IHT).—After last year's success with a dance for it by Merce Cunningham, the Paris Opera has once agein made it islf a temporary capital of contemporary dance with "Triston," the substantial new work by Glen Tetley that has just bor a given its premiere.

In a way, it is hard to see how it could miss, since it united the different yet remarkable qualities of Rudolf Nurevey and Carolyn Carlson: the highly personal idiom of Tetley, the American successor to John Cranko as director of the Stuttgart Ballet: a new score by Hans Werner Henze, and a title that suggests a new look at a rich theatrical and

But Tetley's approach has nothing to do with a romantic treatment of the "Tristan" story, any more than his choreographic language has to do with romantic ballet. He says he has gone back to the Celtic legend, which he finds more physical and sensual than idealized. This implies a reference to the events that precede the opening of Wagner's opers, for instance

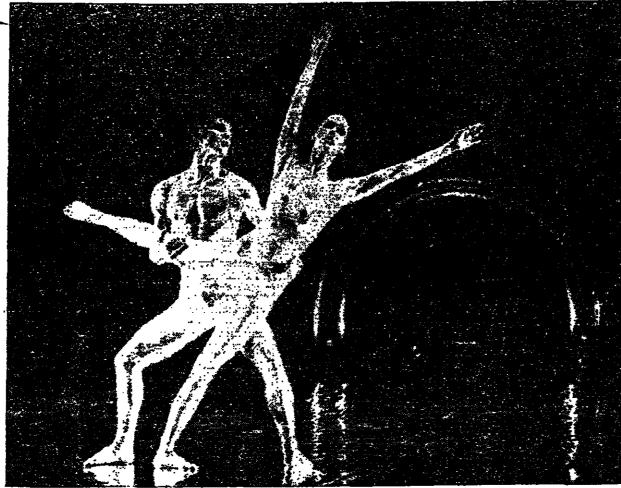

Yet, despite an occasional fleeting allusion to a familiar event, this "Tristan" is not so much narrated as it is communicated to the eyes as if by some kind of primeval and barely decipherable ritual. With its slowmotion twisting, bending, struggling movements for the lovers and the savage exuberance of their surrounding world, it is a dance that would seem at home among the ancient stone monuments of Brittany.

Good Match

Much has been made of the contrast between the classically trained Nureyev and the moderndance background of Carlson, but Nureyev's controlled animal pow-er and Carlson's flowing, almost plant-like suppleness were beautifully matched and mutually expressive. In any case. Nurevey has danced for Tetley before, and he continues to explore and absorb all the languages of dance as if afraid time will run out before he has done everything.

Fifteen of the younger Opera dancers filled out the cast more than creditably, and one in particular, Jean Guizerix, was spiendid in a wild death-dance of a

Murder, Maniacs in Vadim's Latest

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

PARIS, Nov. 26 (IHT). - La Jeune Fille Assassinee" (at the Blarritz, the UGC Odeon and the Cinemonds Opera) is probably what people expect of Roger Vacim, who discovered Brighte Bardot and the specializes in the erotic.

It deals with a sex murder and is so overrun with sexual maniacs of various sorts that any account of it would read like a combination of psychopathic cases collected by Havelock Ellis. It is crowded with scenes of fornication and nudity, but it is weak on suspense; Vadim's sense of the ridiculous seems to have deserted him. He has failed to supply the black humor necesserv to balance such Ell overheated scenario. The film solemnly moves from grotesque situation to grotesque situation.

A pretty model has been murdered, but the police, unable to solve the crime, have dropped the investigation. An intellectual author, at work on a study of Freud, decides to turn detective. He knew the dead woman and intends to write her story so we are treated to flashbacks of her pest. What a tiresome person she was. She fought with her father, showed incestuous longings for her brother, took drugs, married a homosexual movie critic, carried on with a German sadist and the aforementioned author, threw her pearl necklace into the Seine and had a death wish. Almost anyone might want

For his heroine, Vedim has chosen a young novice, Sirpa

Lone, a former fashion magazine model. Miss Lane's sensitive face is at odds with the rampaging of the insane Charlotte, but her presence softens the harshness of the role and is pleasantly soothing. Vadim, as the inquisitive author, proves a sound and sympathetic actor, while Mathieu Carrière as the mad German playboy. Elisabeth Wiener, Michel Duchaussoy and the others suffice in their weird assignments. Pictorially the film has originality and beauty. To give this lurid shocker highbrow tone, the dialogue is sprinkled with literary quotations, including a clamsy paraphrase of H.L. Mencken's "The movies are by morons for morons."

French screen comedy has coarsened lately. An example of the current phase is "La Moutarde Me Monte au Nez" (at the Marignan Pathé and many other houses). The Gallic spirit here gives way to imitation Hollywood slapstick. In the film a timid professor and a film star, with whom the teacher has become unwittingly involved, are pursued by an inquiring photographer. Claude Zidi, responsible for the Charlots movies, directed, giving the film the common touch though its popularity is probably due to Pierre Richard as the savant and Jane Birkin as the movie star.

Don Siegel has put "The Black Windmill" (at the UGC Odéon in English) through its paces with proper vigor. In the film a schoolboy, the son of a British secret agent, is kidnapped. Excitement and surprises hold attention from start to finish. Michael Caine is the secret agent who is torn between duty to his country and paternal affection. The result is above the routine.

The Library of Congress recently honored Isno Hugo, the celebrated engraver and filmmaker, with a showing of eight of his experimental films. This week Hingo came to Paris for a projection of his new film, "Transcending," in which he has worked for the first time with videotape.

"Transcending" was suggested by Maya Pines's book. "The Brain Changers, Scientists and the New Mind Control," which expounds the theory that everyone is either right-brained or left-brained and that in every individual two different persons exist. Hugo gives graphic demonstration of the theory with Yoss Hakashima, the Japanese mime, serving as the split-personality figure. The film is due for theater and television release here in January.

Who Is Eating The Pet Food In the U.S.?

By Laurie Johnston

NEW YORK (NYT),—The sug-IV gestion for the main dian called for beef chunks cooked with eggs, cheese and assorted vegetables (carrots, green peac. celery, green beans, onions, a touch of garlic). Or as an alternative, tuna fish with tomatoes. bell peppers, spinach celer; onlons and a garnish of parsley. The diner being tempted? A dog or a cat. The meals? A 39-cent can of dog-food, a 23-

cent can of cat tuna. Three hillion pounds of carned pet foods are consumed yearly in the United States by a family-owned pet population of about 33 million dogs and 22 million cats and enough strays to bring the estimated total to 90 million. Pet food, ringing up $2 billion in total sales yearly. 's the nation's biggest grocery item with all types totaling more than 7 billion pounds,

But, as concern spreads about hunger and malnutrition as well as poverty and inflation, reports persist that canned pet food in substantial quantities is being eaten by humans, especially the elderly poor. Another version 15 that one-third of the canned pot food sold in some slum areas is consumed by people.

Fallure

Inquiries by city, state and federal health and welfare oificials in the New York metropolitan area as well as grocery chains and the pet food industry itself have failed to substantiate any of the reports. Industry sources said that figures released in May showed a 10-per-cent decline in canned pet food sales in the previous three months and 4 per cent in the previous year, after a 65-percent climb since 1968, with d-v and semi-moist pet foods coch up 9 per cent. They also noted the increasing "anti-crime" own:crahip of large dogs by the elderly and poor, suggesting a porsible connection with reports :1 rising pet food sales in los_{-} income areas.

The only discernible sales of ttern is that there is no discernible pattern," insisted Jay Accman, executive director of the New Jersey Food Council, a grocers' group.

But the report concerning human consumers has had collsequences. For example, the manufacturers and their trade association, the Pet Food Institate in Washington, D.C., are busily knocking down the rumors. which dismay and even irritate them with the inevitably resulting question (and potentially higher cost) of human-food standards for pet food ingredients and processing.

The story that many people were eating dog and cat foods first surfaced in June as an undocumented tidbit in a report to a Senate committee hearing on nutrition. In an article, Them Eat Dog Food?" in the current Columbia Journalism Review. Robert J. Samuelson traces the escalation of the story: from a top-of-the-head estimate (later disayowed) of the "one-third" figure to insertion into the Senste committee report, then into the news and eventually into "a claim that had been repeated so often by so many people that it was accepted as verified." Most of the people interviewed during the last week considered that it was a scandal if even one individual in "overfed" America was actually relying on pet food. "In six months of trying, we have not come across a real case," said Pat Scott of New York City's Office for the Aging.

The credibility of the may stem partly from the industry's own stress on "palatability" of the better canned pet foods to the human eye and nose, as well as the mest-and-protein image through cultivated adver-tising, which for all products totaled $80 million in 1973 (80 per cent of it on television) and is projected at close to $100 million this year.

"It's all those chefs on TV cutting up meat for dog food," said Barbara Primo, a nutritionist with the New York Health Department. "It's not hard to imag. ine some response from people who are craving some kind of mest or protein and don't know cheap alternatives." (Ironically despite the "menty goodness" pitch for the canned foods, virtually all animal nutritionists agree that the dry or semi-mois; foods give pets "more nutrition

Entertainment in New York

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (IHT).— This is how critics for The New York Times rate new films and stage productions:

"Mixed Company" produced and directed by Melville Shavelson. tells of "the adoption of a smail Vietnamese girl, a black boy and a Hopi moppet by a suburban couple who can't even cope with their own three children," says Nora Sayre. "The immense talents of Barbara Harris and Joseph Bologna (as the parents) are wasted throughout this dreary farce, which is tempered with ominously perky music, some liberal intentions run amok cosy jokes about bed wetting, and an attempt at hipness that puts racist lines into the children's mouths." Sayre says that "there whole family kneels down and pretends to cry together. Spectators who came in hopes of comedy could always join them."

"Saturday, Sunday, Monday," says Clive Barnes, is Eduardo de Filippo's "diverting little slice of salami... a play about food, life and food." Barnes finds it difficult to understand the play's success in London, though he is impressed by the appetizing aromas of the various Italian dishes cooked on stage. The situation finally "comes to the boil" during the Neapolitan family's Sunday lunch when the father accuses his neighbor of having an affair with his wife. The play is "handsomely acted" with Sada Thompson as the Italian mother and Eli Wallach as the father outstanding in a host of "lovely performances."

"The Island" is the second of Dead." Clive Barnes calls it "probably the most terrifyingly realistic play of prison life I have ever seen." The play, like "Sizwe Benzi," is a collaborative effort between John Kani, Winston Ntshene and Athol Fugard. "The tone and texture of the dialogue, to say nothing of the almost unbelievable spontaneity of the acting," Barnes says, "produce a degree of actuality that while common enough in the cinema is extraordinarily unusual, arresting, and at times even embarrassing, in the theater." Barnes finds both The Island" and "Sizwe Banzi" "most compelling experiences... that have very little precedent. In compass, they're achieving what Brecht often sought for, a kind of didactic realism, but didacticism is the last quality you

"The Klansman," directed by Terence Young, is a clumsy adaptation of the novel by William Bradford Huie, says Vincent Canby. Set in a small Alabama town in the 1960s, the theme is racial confrontation, Lee Marvin plays the town's would-be humane sheriff, a Ku Klux Klanner. Richard Burton complements Marvin's role with his portrayal of "the last member of an aristocratic family who finds the Klan ridiculous and abhorrent but who is only slightly less out of touch with reality than the black-balting redneck farmers." The characters, says Canby, "are valid and the events that bring about the final bloody shoot-out are not without a certain relation to recent history." However, the plot disintegrates into "the automatic responses to the demands of cheap, easy movie melodrama.... The subject-and Mr. Huie's tough, journalistic novelshould have been much better

"Murder on the Orient Exress," directed by Sidney Lumet, is based on Agatha Christie's famous novel, Shot in Britain, France and Turkey, "it has the kind of all-star cast that only MGM could have afforded 40 years ago," says Vincent Canby. "Setting the tone for the film is Albert Finney's extraordinary performance as Hercule Poirot, Agatha Christie's Belgian detective whose smug, unflappable brilliance makes Sherlock Holmes look like a hysterical freak." Camby finds the film full of the "sort of wildly theatrical overstatements that heretofore only Laurence Olivier, Marlon Brando and, occasionally, Maggie Smith have gotten away with." Canby's only quarrel with the film is a minor one: "There is too much music on the soundtrack."

CHANGES IN THE BANKING SECTOR IN LEBANON

by Pierre Nasrallah,
Secretary-General of the Association of Banks in Lebanon.

In the recent evolution in the Lebonese banking system, changes have taken place at three levels: that of legislation, the structure of the institutional apparatus, and in banking activity itself.

I—LEGISLATIVE CHANGES

The Money and Credit Code, which is the basis of the law where banking is concerned, goes back to 1963. It was altered by new regulations in 1967 subsequent to the crash of the Intra Bank and the June war. At that time, following the serious events which had worldwide consequences, notably in the region of the Middle East, the legislator was meeting the requirements of the banking sector and the economy in general. In October, 1972, by amend-ing once again the Money and Credit Code, the legislator was simply operating logically. He was far from reacting to events; he just felt the need of adapting the texts of the law to the rapid transformations taking place in transactions in modern economies. He took particular care to ease the relations between the Central Bank and the commercial banks, to give a wider margin of action to the Central Bank, and to reinforce the powers of the banking Control Com-

a) Relations between the Central Bank and commercial banks have been eased in more than one respect. By extending the maturity deadlines (from 90 to 180 days) for bonds admitted for rediscount; by admitting for rediscount, alongside the traditional private bonds, public bonds issued or guaranteed by the state; lastly, in certain conditions, by the purchase and sale of public or private bonds, if need be, through the intermediary of the Beirut stock market. The discount and buying and selling operations for the said bonds are also possible when they are made out in foreign currencies. Finally the Central Bank can, in the light of the general monetary situation, accept interest producing deposits from the banks and can consider if it judges it opportune that the banks' investment in public bonds, or bands issued with the quarantee of the state, form part of the compulsory reserve. This is indeed not an exhaustive list, as the amendments made cover many other points.

b) The Central Bank's

margin of action becomes wider. It is possible for it to fix and madify, when-ever it considers it necessary, the standards of managemen, that the banks should observe in order to preserve a state of liquidity and solvability. Its action on credit control is broadened and no longer limited to advances against securities and consumer loans. Lastly, its action is no longer limited simply to the banking sector globally, but also to firms on on individual basis. Its action is henceforth more differentiated in that, for each bank taken individually, it can determine the proportions which should exist between assets and liabilities. c) The strengthening of the Bank's Control Commission powers. Its powers exceed the banking caea proper and extend to financial establishments. Furthermore, the acquisi-tion of real estate by the Banks in recovery of doubtful receivables is subject to its prior permission; it is also up to the Control Commission to evaluate the bank's assets and eventual losses. Lastly they have powers of evaluation in respect to the granting of loans to members of Boards of Directors according to the rules laid down by the law.

II—THE MODIFICATION OF THE INSTITUTION-AL APPARATUS

c) First special legislation enabled the creation of a medium and long-term investment and commercial bank, Banque Nationale pour le Développement Industriel et Touristique, with capital of LL. 60 million, 51% being supplied by the State and 49% by the commercial banks.

b) Secondly, it is necessary to indicate the creation of a new type of banking establishment specialized in medium and long-term loans. The law which governs the formation of these establishments goes back to April 21st, 1967. It was not, however, applied before 1972 with the formation tion of the following banks with a capital of II.15 million.

-Banque d'Investissement et de Financement-INFI (formed by the Bank Audi SAL, the Caisse Centrale des Banques Populaires, the Renault group, Hambros Bank, the Missu Bank and Nomura Secunities, in addition to the participation of private Arab investors.

—Banque de Financement (capital III7 million). Initially this was a commercial bank controlled by Intra Investment Co., which has been transformed into an investment bank.

Union Bank, formed in 1974, with the participation of the Gefinor Group, the BCAIF, the Sumitomo Bank, Kredietbank of Luxembourg, Daiwa Securities Co. Limited, the Scattish Eastern Investment Rank Limited, Smith Barney International, Scattish Ontario Investment, and the Securities Trust of Scatland, together with Madame Nadia El Khoury.

-Banque du Proche-Orient SAL Byblos Arch Financing SAL and Interfinance bank. These three organizations are still in the process of for-

c) One notes as well the introduction to Beirut of new commercial banks with international networks subsequent to their purchase of Lebanese Banks in activity. The following names can be noted in particular:

—Crédit Suisse has bought the Kairouz Bank SAL. —Chemical Bank has bought the Rabiya Bank

SAL.

—The Bank of Credit and Commerce International has bought the Banque Chartouni SAL.

The Fidelity Bank has bought the Banque de la Méditerranée SAL.
Crédit Commercial de France has bought the

Banque Libanaise des Emigrés SAL. —The Toronto Dominion Bank has bought the Banque des Cèdres SAL. —The Morgan Guaranty

Trust Company has purchased 40% of the Bank Al-Mashrek.
—The Hanlowy Bank
(Poland) has bought the Commercial Business

Bank SAL.

—A group of Kuwaiti financiers controls the Liberal Bank, with part ownership by the First National City Bank.

Apart from these purchases, other transformations have taken place in the banking sector: two new commercial banks have seen the light of day (The Banque Commerciale Syro-Libanaise and the Lebanese Arab Bank) and the Société Tunisienne de

Banque has become the

Arch Libyan Tunisian
Bank, through a contribution of Libyan capital.

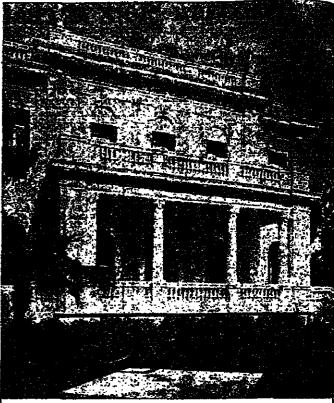

d) The particularly massive influx of foreign banks' representative offices into the Benut market is the final element that can be representative offices into the Beirut market is the final element that can be noted in the modification of the structure of the institutional apparatus. The number of these offices was limited to 28 in 1970; today it officially attains 47 establishments. Other applications for admission are, however, in process and it may be assumed that the number will reach nearly 55 before the end of 1974. All the flags of international finance are represented there.

III—THE NEW ORIENTA-TION OF BANKING ACTIVITY

There is on obvious change in the structure at the assets in the balance sheet of the banks. Loans to the economy are taking the lead over outside investments. Traditionally these two types of investment ac-counted for a similar share in banking assets; this share stood around 45% of the total for each sector and has stayed roughly at the same level since 1970. Things changed in 1973, with outside investments falling to 40%, loans to the economy rising to 51%. It is true that these percentages are those for the month of December, but the average for the year should not be considerably different.

The consequence here is important to emphasize. Banking finance in Lebanon, because it depended for at least half of its activity on outside reinvestments, was considered to be structurally anti-inflationist; but with a reversal in proportions, a new factor appeared. The greater part of financing is now devoted to internal credits with its direct implications on global demand. From now on, a more effective monetary policy is required, and the monetary authorities will have a delicate part to play in this connection.

Banque Audi moves into new premises for a better handling of your Business in the Middle East.

This suggests, he said, "a greater need for recycling (of petrodollars) through official channels in 1975." Mr. Witteveen, whose remarks were made public by the IMP, said that while there is now "broad agreement" that governments, central banks and inter-national organizations will have to do more next year in recycling petrodollars, there are still "many uncertainties" about how this is to be accomplished. The IMF, he suggested, will have to expand its "oil-facility" lending operations, borrowing more from the off-exporting na-tions and possibly from a few industrial nations with strong payments positions, to provide loans to other countries.

Because some of the weaker developing countries need loans "on highly-concessional" terms, he said, the IMP is considering ways in which an "interest sub-sidy" might be arranged for such

In his first public comments on recent U.S. proposals for new international financing arrangements. Mr. Witteveen mentioned that the United States has outlined another approach to con-cessional financing for develop-ing countries through an IMFmanaged trust fund.

Such a fund he noted would receive contributions from the oil-producing countries and others, and would offer credits at relatively low cost.

Mr. Witteveen said he was sure that this "suggestion" would be considered on an urgent basis along with other proposals by the IMF-interim committee of dinance ministers and the joint IMFin January.

The IMF official said "many details" have to be worked out on other proposals, such as the U.S. plan calling for a $25-billion fund outside the IMF, for loans to industrial countries, with the financing to be pledged by the United States, Japan and Western European countries.

The company has been secur-ing cash for its Japanese operations by exporting autos to other countries where most have gone into inventory. The inventories are financed locally with the Japanese parent collecting cash as though the exports had been actual sales. This is a practice used in varying degrees by nearly all Japanese companies.

Toyo Kogyo's overseas inventories, especially in the United States, where stocks are estimated to be equivalent to 18 months sales, are so large as to be a source of some concern

Bayer's Profit Rises

LEVERKUSEN, W. Germany, Nov. 26 (AP-DJ).—Bayer group's net profit in the nine months rose 28.1 per cent to 511 million marks on a turnover increase of 31.2 per cent, Herbert Gruenwald, management board chairman, reported today.

Mr. Gruenwald predicted increased profit for 1974 resulting from an outstanding first half but tempered by a cooler second half. Bayer earned 566 million marks in 1973.

World turnover for the full year is expected to rise to 18.5 billion marks from 14.7 billion.

Dollar, Pound Soften Again

LONDON, Nov. 26 (AF-DJ).— The dollar and sterling continued to weaken against Continental European currencies today amid indications that some of the oilproducing states were again di-versifying their dollar holdings into marks and Swiss francs. The dollar fell to about 2,4535 marks from 2.46, and fell more sharply against the Swiss franc, dropping to 2.6663 from 2.6925,

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26 (IHT). -On Nov. 12, after avoiding the term for weeks, President Ford's economic advisers conceded that the United States is indeed in a recession. Now, one of them says it may be the longest recession since the end of World War II. The economic expert concerned is William Simon, the secretary of the Treasury, who acknowl-edged that the country is in a in, it will appear that this month we are moving into a recession." Until that statement, officials had been using such terms as "spasm" and "stagflation" to describe the U.S. economy. Yesterday, Treasury Secretary Simon told the Associated Press in an interview that the slump "might be longer than any of the recessions since World War II, but it's way too early to tell whether it will be more severe."

The longest of the five postwar recessions lasted for 13 months, from July 1953 to August 1954. The last recession, went from November 1969 to November 1970. Mr. Simon said the U.S. memployment rate-now 6 per cent of the labor force-will hit 7 per cent by late spring, and indicated he would not be surprised if it went higher. The nation's worst unemploy-yesterday. Analysts attributed the gain in part to rejection by the House of Representatives Appropriations Committee of most of President Ford's recommendations for cutbacks in appropriations in the year ending June 30. Merkin & Co.'s analyst Charles Jensen said that anticipation of a coal pact approval by the miners' bargaining council helped buoy the market in the second half of the session and noted the pullback followed announcement that the council adjourned from

Sugar Price Rise Benefits All in Industry

By Eileen Shanahan WASHINGTON, Nov. 26 (NYT) -A government staff study made public yesterday concluded that "all sectors of the U.S. sugar in-dustry" have realized "very large windfall gains" from the recent big increases in sugar prices,

The study, released as the new Council on Wage and Price Stability, headed by economist Albert Rees, opened two days of hearings on the sugar situation. It did not attempt to fix any blame for the sharp rise in sugar prices,

Its author, Bruce Walter, of the council's staff, merely analyzed what had happened in various sectors of the sugar industry and concluded that all of them, including the growers of sugar beets and cane, had shared in the "much higher" profitability of SUGRI,

Other witnesses at the hearing included producers and refiners of sugar and both individual and commercial consumers.

Among the less familiar assertions and arguments that they made were the following: • Carol Tucker Foreman, ex-ecutive director of the Consumer

Federation of America, said that a "gross mistake" by the Agriculture Denartment in January which publicly predicted a one-

British Sugar Price Drops As 'Stalemate' Continues

LONDON, Nov. 26 (AP-DJ).—The London daily price for raw sugar dropped a further £25 a long ton to £585 today due to lack of outside influences, dealers said. The decline followed yesterday's fall of £30 to £610 and contrasted with a record £650 set last Thursday.

December delivery sugar, however, rose to a middling £535 from £517.50 on technical reaction to the sharp downtrend. Other terminal market positions remained limit down, seller. December is the present spot month, which is not subject to permissible limit price movements under market rules.

C. Czarnikow Ltd., the sugar brokers, said the market is currently in a "stalemate," with potential buyers reluctant to make any offers in the absence of price indications provided by international buying or selling tenders.

sial bills this late in the session, The vote of the committee was eight to six against sending the bill to the full House. It had been approved by the House Commerce Committee in October with only a single objection

There are other procedures for bringing the bill to the floor, out it would be difficult to do so with so little time left in this session, A similar hill has been passed by the Senate, but both measures will die at the end of this session and will have to be reintroduced next year.

Rules Committee members said they had been contacted in the past week by representatives of the NYSE and the Securities Association urging them not to approve the bill. The chief objection ras to the elimination of fixed commission rates, which would cause financial damage to the brokerage industry, according to the opponents of the bill.

consumers.

• William Quinlan general counsel of the Associated Retail Bakers of America, said that many of the nation's 20,000 bakeries, most of them small, neighborhood businesses, were threatened with bankruptcy because of higher prices of sugar, shortening, eggs and other ingredients.

He asked for an emergency subsidy by the government to bring down sugar prices to consumers. Among the countries that have such a subsidy now, he said, are Canada, France, West Germany and Britain • Elinor Guggenheimer, who is the commissioner of New York City's department of consumer affairs, proposed that Congress repeal the tariff on sugar, which is $.625 cent a pound on raw sugar. "There is no longer any need to protect our domestic industry from import competition and such tariffs only add to our already incredibly high prices,"

Among the many, sometimes conflicting, reasons given by various witnesses for the nearquadrupling or sugar prices in the past year, there was one essentially undisputed reason: The world demand for sugar has risen. faster than world production. In general, producers and refiners of sugar saw this as the whole reason for the price increase, whereas representatives of both commercial and household users of sugar felt that the underlying supply and demand picture was only part of the cause. Other causes suggested by one or more witnesses included the following: Speculation in sugar futures.

• Speculative purchases of sugar by Arab nations that are using the profits from oil to make additional money in sugar.

• Congressional refusal to extend the Sugar Act that, for decades, put a floor under the prices charged for sugar in the United States by limiting the amount of sugar that could be imported.

· Profiteering by sugar producers, especially those who refine sugar from sugar beets, rather than cane. The refining process for beets is simpler than for cane, several witnesses pointed out, and the cost of raising sugar beets has not risen the way the world price for raw cane

ALDOUS HUXLEY: A BIOGRAPHY

By Sybille Bedford. Knopf/Harper and Row. 769 pp. $15.

Reviewed by Stephen Spender

MOST artists are more interesting in their works than in their lives. With Aldous Huxley, however, one feels that the man somehow adds up to more than the sum of the writings: or perhaps that the writings can only be seen as a whole in the bril-liant light of the character of the man. There are good reasons. I think, for feeling this. One is that Aldous (as Sybille Bedford sensibly calls him throughout her book) showed exemplary, almost incredible, courage in overcoming adverse circumstances. For this very reason his activities and writings are bound up with his efforts to overcome difficulties. In spite of—that is to say, perhaps because of—the near-bindness because of—the perhaps because of the perhaps because o with which he was afflicted at a very early age, he was super-latively well read, and acquired encyclopedic knowledge. In spite of—perhaps because of—his feeling cut off from other people, he struggled constantly to understand them, to improve himself so that he could give more and be closer to other human beings. In spite of—perhaps because of —his having by nature an outsider's satiric temperament, he learned to make love the aim and center of his life. Thus to read his blography is to learn a good deal about the art of living and, at the end. of dying.

Miss Bedford's book is in no sense hagiography. However, saintliness was an extreme spiritual condition that interested Aldous, as was also its opposite, diabolism. He discussed both in "Grey Eminence" and "The Devils of Loudun." Meeting him when he was alive, and reading about him in this book, I feel that he sometimes himself, especially toward the end, attained a state of spiritual detachment which was close to saintliness.

Sybille Bedford describes Aldous as completely unneurotic. This seems an oversimplification. It is more probable that the family depressive neurosis, like his near blindness, was a challenge that he overcame with his heroic mixture of courage, intelligence and a sort of gaiety intensified to a spiritual radiance. If Aldous had—as many people thought-an aura of goodness, the light he shed was happiness. He was not self-righteous, nor a prig.

It was with the publication of "Point Counter Point" in 1929 and "Eyeless in Gaza" (1936) that a diary-writing autobiographical character began to emerge at the center of his work who is making tremendous efforts to understand the "extraordinariness" of life and present it in his fiction, and is at the same time in search of a philosophy. Sybille Bedford has a grasp of the complexity of Aldous's life works that gains strength as her biography proceeds. She does more than tell us a great deal about his activities, his friendships, his marriage, his books, his travels, etc. She makes us feel that we really know him and his wife Maria (who with her letters and diaries provides an unceasing commentary on their marriage), that we are there. From first to last, Aldous is intensely active, inquiring, traveling, gathering in information with both hands. In spite of this, though he undergoes a great change.

To define the change is rather difficult. Perhaps it is best to say that he went deeper into his thoughts and sensibility in order to become more selfless. His philosophy began in the thirties with his pacifism, which was based on a conviction that was is always evil because the methods of destruction and propagands it employs inevitably subvert the ends, however good or well-meaning. He was haunted by the vision of two possible futures. One, the most likely, was of destruction war and ever-increasing tyrant; in an overpopulated world. The other was that of the "pragmatic dream" that he advanced in his last essay-novel. "Island": Psychologists must be given power to disqualify certain types of people from ever getting into positions of power. The economic system must be cured of overproduction and the world of overpopulation Scientists, psychologists, educa-tors who have mustered techniques which could bring life closer to the "pragmatic dream" should be given every opportunity to do so. This is the Huxleyan Utopia of a happiness brought about by scientific techniques. It is the opposite of his somber vision of a world made miserable by its abuse of these techniques in the hands of power maniacs Sybille Bedford's great achievement is that she steadily keeps Aldous's spiritual development at the center of her book, while at the same time relating it to his very scattered activities and relationships: his marriage with Maria, his role as a father to his son Matthew, his relationship with other members of the Hu-ley family, his friendship wir! the delightful guru Gerald Hearth Then there are his travels : Mexico, India, France, Italy, an all over America. There are his and Maria's endless changes of residence. There are all his comunications with psychoanalysts doctors, sociologists, scientists and last but not least, cranks. There is all the lecturing, teaching and visiting campuses that took are so much of the last years of his life after his second marriage to Laura Archera.

of Maria and later of Aldous, are agonizingly well documented, as is the destruction of his house in California by fire two years before he died in 1963. The end of the book is curiously sad, as though after all Aldous was defeated by loneliness, illness, blindness and a shrugging descair at the state of the world. A great deal of his life does indeed seem to have been spent in vain protest against the human folly of the catastrophic public events of this century. But perhaps we are approaching a stage in our civilization when politics as we have known them will be bankrupt. And then, if it is not too late. men may reconsider the "pragmatic dream."

Big 10 Bowl-Procedure Changes Are Urged

By Gordon S. White Jr. NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (NYT).-Even coach Woody Hayes of Ohio State, whose team has been sent to the Rose Bowl for three straight years by a vote of the Big 10 athletic directors, joined others yesterday in urging the conference to change the pro-cedure for selecting its entry to the Rose Bowl game.

"The selection now has become more important than the game," Hayes said. "We're going to have to change this thing. It's not

Ohio State beat Michigan, 12-10. Saturday, creating a tie between the Buckeyes and Wolverines for the Big 10 championship. The two teams also finished in a tie for the league title a year ago after playing a 10-10 deadlock in their season finale. The year before that, Ohio State won the title outright. In each case, the Big 10 athletic directors voted a day after the game to send Ohio State to the Rose Bowl. For the ties, the vote did not satisfy Michigan people a year ago and it did not satisfy them this sea-

Hayes suggested that the Rig 10 use the Pacific-8 Conference method of selecting a Rose Bowl team, Such a plan will be con-sidered by the Big 10 Conference members at their league meeting

The Pac-8, which had its own problems years ago when it voted for the team to play in the Rose Bowl, has rules now that settle tie situations. If two Pac-8 teams tie for the league football championship, the team that won the game between the co-champions would go to the Rose Bowl. If Pac-8 co-champions played a tie with each other, the team that appeared least recently in the Rose Bowl would get the bowl bowl game in 19 years. Likewise, the top 20 ratings went through almost weekly revisions as the former weaklings of col-lege football registered frequent surprises: Navy beating Penn State, Michigan State beating Ohio State, Wisconsin beating Nebraska, Arkansas beating USC, Purdue beating Notre Dame, Baylor beating Texas.

It is likely that the power shifts will continue. The 30-scholarship limit and the freshman eligibility rule are doing much to equalize teams. Many coaches have predicted that even the domination of the super powers eventually could end.

The bowls also were a major part of a Year of Controversy. Bowl executives began picking teams early in November and wound up with such chinkers as Florida against Newsaka in the Sugar Bowl and Penn State against the Southwest Conference champion in the Cotton Bowl.

The decision by UPI not to rank Oklahoma aroused Sooner fans and created the possibility of having as many as three different national champions: UPT's, AP's and Oklahoma, which could finish the year as the nation's only undefeated team.

The Big 10 again had problems deciding which team to send to the Rose Bowl Ohio State, which beat co-champion Michigan Saturday, got the nod from the league's athletic directors and the Wolverines, despite a 30-2-1 record of the last three years, have to stay home again.

Notre Dame has managed a 9-1 record, with a game against USC Saturday left in the regular season, despite many injuries and a weaker-than-normal team. Texas slipped, missing out on a Cotton Bowl berth for the first time in seven seasons. Penn State remained the best in the East but was not the feared team of past

Texas finished second to the Oakland A's in the American League West.

"Whenever you get an award like this, it's more of a team award," Hargrove said. "With Jeff hitting all those RBIs, it made my job a whole lot easier. You've got to be thankful you played for a good team because that's what made it possible."

Hargrove's major-league debut was an instant success. He batted 371 through his first 59 games. Billy Martin, the Texas manager, said of the rookie: "He knows the strike zone. He isn't fooled often. A pitcher may get him out the first couple of times, then look out. And what's more, he has the glove to go with his big bat." Hargrove doesn't consider himself a power hitter; he hit only four homers last season, had 18 doubles and six triples. He also hits to the opposite field often.

Muller Calls West German Resignation Definite

BONN, Nov. 24 (UPI).-Gerd Muller, one of the world's most talented forwards, has renewed his yow that West Germany's national soccer team can no longer count on him.

"Why should I return to the fold?" the 29-year-old player asked. "I don't want to get trampled on my bones again in the 1978 World Cup as a 33-year-old man." Muller, who has secured a top lace in Germany's football haii of fame, along with such all-time greats as Anderl Kupfer, Georg Lehner, Fritz Szepan, Paul Janes, Fritz Walter and Uwe Seeler, said that "my decision to quit the national team is definite." Muller, who scored the winner in the 2-1 victory over the Nether-lands that won West Germany the 1974 World Cup, was not the only player to quit after that tremendous success.

Other Onitiers

Shortly after the final whistle in the 1974 World Cup was blown, midfield star Wolfgang Overath and outside-right Juergen Grabowski also told manager Helmut Schoen that they were fed up with playing for his side.

The team's disintegration was accelerated further when Bayern Munich's fullback, Paul Breitner, broke the news that he sold his talent to the Real Madrid club.

When Europe is your advertising target, the International Herald Tribune is your advertising medium. Here's why.

The businessmen who make up Europe's most important audience are increasingly multi-national. They work across borders. They buy and sell across borders. And they travel a lot. Because they think internationally. they appreciate a newspaper that does too.

That's why, more and more, they rely on the one newspaper that meets their needs. That's edited from an international rather than a national point of view. That's readily available no matter where they are. A newspaper they can turn to for a clear, concise summary of what happened yesterday in the worlds of finance, commerce,

For Saturday's Game Annual Military Sideshow Begins

By Jay Searcy

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (NYT).-There will be a bonfire on the parade grounds at West Point one night this week and cadets will sing and march to the coach's house with torches. Army's football captains will speak, heroes of the past will return and cadets will salute officers with

"Beat Navy. sir." Bedsheets will hang from barracks windows like banners, statues will be decorated with bras and similar ornaments, the Goats will play the Engineers in a traditional football game and a cheerleading organization called the Rabble Rousers will complete rehearsals for the 1974 John F. Kennedy Stadium Army-Navy football game and sideline show scheduled Saturday.

And one night this week at the Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md., 59-year-old Vice-Adm. William Mack will be rousted from his home and ridden in a blanket to some high jinks adventure-like a forced swim in the Severn River—and some officers may shinny over the scademy walls and go AWOL with hundreds of middles. Thirty-six companies of men will about "Beat Army" until they are red-faced and rehearse their roles in the 75th Army-Navy game and sideshow.

It is a surprise show that has been playing in Philadelphia annually for 27 years, attracting as many as 102,000 spectators and a national television audience of millions. It has a cast of about 8,400—the cadets and midshipmen of the Army and Navy academies—two mules, a goat and it sometimes features generals, admirals and a president.

The game will not affect the national collegiate football polls—it hasn't in 10 years—but Philadelphia's 6,000 first-class hotel rooms will be filled, and there will be black-tie parties, ballroom dances and mayor's receptions.

Every night at the mess hall at West Point, the cadets will listen carefully for an announcement that comes about once every four years: "There has been a report from the Naval Academy that the Navy goat is missing," at which time 4.200 cadets start chanting, "We've got Navy's goat, we've got Navy's goat." At Annapolis, on the eve of the game, plebes

Observer Hard Times and Love

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON.—Good times to be grateful for the comic relief have been hard on love, mar- a first-class fool can provide. riage and family in the United States, which may help account for the soured spirit with which we meet the return of hard times. Instead of love, marriage and family, we now have sex, cohabitation and nursing homes, which may be dandy when the money is sufficient for footloose and fancy-free living but don't help much when you're

The modern assault on love, marriage and family as "oldfashioned" shackles soldered on people by antique convention ignores the economic necessity of the harsh age in which Americans, now graying and plump with fat years, found that blood kin and gaiety provided protection from hunger and despair. In the Depression, everybody went to live with an uncle who had a job. They are his oatmeal at breakfast and his boiled rooster at Sunday dinner, played Monopoly through the night with cousins and aunts, and stood guard against the meter reader. stalling him at the front door until Uncle Harry, who hadn't worked in five years, could pull the "cheaters" out of the cellar On Sunday afternoons Uncle

Pete, who lived by his wits in Hoboken, would show up in a battered Kessel or Whippet and take the children for a drive, and the adults, placing family solidarity above the priggish respect for the state which is now so fashionable among the righteous, would forbear from asking whether the car was "hot."

In these family communes, we were practicing survival just as surely as the frontier families had in another era of rapacity, and anyone suggesting that we were victims of an outmoded extendedfamily convention would have been heard with the same hilarity and mirth we accorded "the Kinglish" and "Amos 'n' Andy" and Herbert Hoover's pledge of a chicken in every pot.

Nowadays we seem less appreciative of fools. Perhaps you have to go almost to the end of the line, and have a glimpse of the worst just over the horizon,

The boom in love corresponded with the drawing together of famflies, but it was the variety of love that was then called "romance," in which one fell in love, married, went on a honeymoon and, of course, raised a family, or to put it more precisely. strengthened the only social survival unit that seemed to work.

Contemplating this family of the future, one envisaged boys who, at school age, would get part-time jobs to add to the Saturday morning doughnut fund and girls who could do the housework and pull the "cheaters" if the meter reader paid a surprise call while mother was earning her $12 a week at the laundry. Later, with extraordinary luck, one of them might go to college and earn $5,000 a year, or marry a man who did, thus insuring aunts, uncles, cousins and in-laws of a future on Easy Street.

. . . The love that would lead to this family nirvana was celebrated endlessly in song, and the lyrics usually argued its economic advantages. It was a good time to fall in love, ran a typical lyric, because both bananas and potatoes were cheaper.

On our present excursion into hard times we are traveling without our love to keep us warm, to paraphrase a Depression song's defiant reply to an earlier energy crisis. It is foolish to sing "Bananas are more expensive, potatoes are more expensive, now's the time to fall in love." And when even shanties in old shanty town are going at $50,000, what is there to sing about?

In any case, love, marriage and family have not survived very well the long bout of good times which they helped us survive the Depression to enjoy. Uncles who have jobs these days tend more and more to live in one-bedroom apartments, which they tempo-rarily share with a lover with whom they haven't the slightest intention of shuffling off to Buffalo. And who wants to play Monopoly any more when the most expensive property on the board would barely pay the weekly grocery bill?

So here we are, shed of the shackles of family, and the trap of marriage, and the myth of "romance," and with all this freedom why are we too soured to let

Face-Lifting a Monument: The Newspaper 'Figaro'

DARIS (IHT).—Can a 108-year-old newspaper—suffering from typographical poisoning, falling circulation, a fuddyduddy image, and tired blood—regain the bounce and vigor of its Second Empire youth? It not only can but must, in the opinion of Christian Lambert, who ought to know. Associate editor-in-chief of Le Figaro, he has just begun a monumental job of plastic surgery, the paper's first face-lift since late August, 1944, when it reappeared on the shell-torn streets of Paris slightly in advance of the Liberation.

Chatting in his office at the newspaper's opulent, châteaulike headquarters on the Rond-Point of the Champs-Elysées, the young and personable Lambert spoke frankly about the decision that the time had come to present the world with "un nouveau Figaro"—one of many since its origin, which dates to 1826. The paper that took its name from the dashing Beaumarchais character, synonymous with high spirits, liberality, élan, savoir-faire, had grown old-fashioned—"yes, demodé. We had begun to project a negative image."

The most obvious thing wrong with Le Figaro was its front page. Resembling the aftermath of an explosion in a print shop, it was the outstanding contemporary demonstration of the fact that newspaper readers can accustom themselves to anything. On a typical Figaro front page, the upper half was a Matto Grosso of headlines—just headlines, no stories. The stories were on the lower half of the page, if you got that far. But obviously the Figuro's readers did, and in large numbers— the paper's circulation is still between 600,000 and 700,000, and it is still France's biggest morning daily.

Nonetheless, it was clear that the paper was losing ground— "perhaps our readers were dying off." Lambert said with a grin and in 1972 the top brass began to plan the present transformation. The results were unveiled Nov. 13, accompanied by a front-page editorial. It began gently with a reminder that the world has been changing constantly "since Adam and Eve" and concluded with a quotation from Mao Tse-tung: "The past must serve the present." The new Figaro—a huge improve-ment, at least visually, on the old one—looks somewhat like the English Guardian. The thicket of headlines has been eliminated, replaced by three or four stories, with stylish-looking much lighter, Century Bold headlines, only the first word and proper names capitalized.

Thus the principal change in Figure is typographical, but there are others that are not immediately apparent, aimed at presenting a newspaper that is "clearer, faster (to read), more in touch with the modern world, and with youth . . . One of the chief contrasts with most American papers is that Le Figaro (in common with most French papers) classifies the news under regular headings; Foreign on pages 3 and 4, Domestic on page 5, Politics on 6 and 7, and so on. According to Lambert, the reaction of Le Figaro's readers to the changes has been almost entirely favorable, though he added that the mail strike had greatly reduced the volume of response. But he said that many readers had phoned to say that they were very pleased with the "nouveau Figaro."

More, perhaps, than other papers in other countries, this is a paper that has played a monumental role in the history of the nation it serves. Le Figaro's origins did not suggest, however, that a monument was in the making. The paper was launched, in January, 1826, as a four-page, pocket-sized weekly. Irreverent, satirical, and supposedly "nonpolitical," it lasted just under a year, after which the title was sold for 300 francs. Six months later, the enterprising owner sold it again—for 30,000 francs.

The paper staggered along, with many crises, through the first half of the 19th century, by which time it was printing the work of Balzac and Daumier. Le Figaro went daily in mid-November, 1866, achieving a circulation of 56,000 copies with the aid of such contributors as Zola. Through the turbulent years of the Franco-Prussian War and the Commune, it buttressed its new stature as a serious journal of news and opinion. By 1874, when it moved to spacious quarters on Rue Drouot, its contributors included Sardou, Halevy, Dumas and the Goncourt brothers. At the turn of the century the top editor was Gaston Calmette, who brought into the Figaro fold such writers as Rostand, Maeterlinck and Proust. On March 17, 1914, Le Figaro appeared with a black border: Calmette had been slain in his Figaro office, with five revolver shots, by Mrs. Joseph Caillaux, wife of the French finance minister. She had accused the editor of maligning her husband in printed attacks on his private life. (Caillaux resigned from office to defend his wife-

Le Figaro did not bow to the Nazis, like the Vichy regime of Marshal Pétain, after the armistice of June, 1940, but made a strategic retreat to Bordeaux, then Clermont-Ferrand, then Lyons, in the so-called "unoccupied zone." finally suspending publication because of Vichy censorship in December, 1942. Thus it escaped the compromising stain of having published under Nazi control. On Aug. 22, 1944, a dozen intreplied Figaro editors, working furtively in the basement of a Montantre print shop, produced the newspaper's first Liberation issue as French Résistance troops guarded the door. (That day's top headline was: "La Délivrance de Paris"; the next day's was "Paris Combat Pour sa Liberte.")

Those may indeed have been Le Figaro's finest hours, but Christian Lambert and the team that is transforming the paper under his direction believe there may be some fine ones still to come. More changes are in store, in the next "times or four years," including possibly an even more radical shift: to a tabloid format. And comic strips, maybe? Lambert smiled, but promised nothing. Le Figaro is, after all, a serious paper.
